The Democratic opponents of the income tax determined, in pursuance of the policy adopted at the meeting of the New York delegation yesterday to throw every parliamentary obstacle in its way. The hope of the income tax men is that the early rulings will be so modified as to let them be recognized, even before Mr. Wilson finishes all his amendments. He has about fifteen yet to be submitted, each of which might arouse such prolonged discussion as to consume the balance of this week and thus side-track the income tax amendment.

Some of the New York delegation made overtures to the income tax men this nach for an adjustment of the trouble, but no agreement could be reached. The income tax men were willing to considered separately if the New Yorkers would reciprocate by agreeing not to oppose it. When the suggestion was rejected all overtures between the two elements came to an end. The filibustering followed as a result. By noon as many people as could rowd into City Hall Park between park Row and the City Hall were packed in one solid mass of humanity. Fully 5,000 people stood for three house with faces upturned to the bulletin boards which were displayed on the Pulitzer Building every few minutes from the time the men arrived at the ringside. There were only two or three chances for the crowd to cheer, for it was all over so quickly.

There were only two or three chances for the crowd to cheer, for it was all over so quickly.

When the bulletin announcing Corbett's victory in the third round was put out a great shout went up, which could be heard almost from river to river.

Then the waiting thousands made a break across Park Row to get "The Evening World" Extra, which they knew would be on the street a minute later, with full details of the fight.

For ten minutes the crush in Park Row was so great that street-car and wagon traffic was completely blocked.

Then the crowd melted a way, and the flutter of "The Evening World" Extras in each one's possession told the story of which source of information was most appreciated by the public.

THE INTEREST IN LONDON.

"World's" Pictures of the Fighters Fists Displayed to a Crowd. (By Associated Press.) LONDON, Jan. 25.—The greatest interest is manifested here, in the Corbett-Mitchell championship glove fight. The evening newspapers are printing every scrap of news obtainable concerning events at Jacksonville, and have made arrangements to hold open until 9 or 10 clock this evening in order to print the result. In the hotels and at the different sport ing clubs and other resorts, crowds are gathering this afternoon, and though ware is much speculation as to the re-sult, there is very little betting. Frank Slavin was the centre of a group of sporting men in his saloon during the afternoon, when he was heard to declare that Mitchell does not mean to fight and that he is simply try-ing to get the money from Abingdon's will.

In Fleet street a large crowd of people gathered in front of The Sporting Life windows, where pictures of Mitchell's and Corbett's fists, from the New York "World," were exposed and attracted "World," were exposed and attracted much attention, such a piece of sport-ing enterprise being almost beyond the ing enterprise being almost beyond Fleet street crowd's comprehension.

New York police interfered, and it was necessary to complete the arrangements outside the State.

This was the beginning of a conflict with officers of the law that did not cease up to the day set for the fight. Mitchell several times expressed disgust with the interference, and claimed there was discrimination against him because of his nationality, while Corbett's friends set up the counter claim that the Englishman was simply bluffing and would be pleased to have the fight prevented.

General Olney and Mr. Kilbreth, the Collector of Customs at New York, who came here for the purpose. The arrangement, however, will be submitted to Assistant Treasurer Jordan, at New York, before it goes into operation, as upon his office will devolve considerable labor to carry it into effect. Acting Secretary Curtis will go to New York this afternoon and have a conference with Mr. Jordan. As agreed on, the proposition is that ference with Mr. Jordan. As agreed on, the proposition is that the bank with which the importer has his money is to deposit in the morning with the Assistant Treasurer, to the credit of the Collector, the amount of money deemed requisite to meet all his customs dues, the same to be put to the credit of the special customs funds. When the duties are to be paid the bank will issue a check on the fund deposited to the order of the Collector.
